

Grant Opportunities & News You Can Use

Hello, faculty,

I hope you are having a restful break. We’re back with a new issue of our newsletter.

For our Featured Funder, we are profiling one of my personal favorite organizations, The American Association of University Women (AAUW). So if you have ever wondered what the connection is between clean drinking water and women in academia, read on. Our Sage Advice column deals with a topic that has been getting increasing attention in recent years: data visualization.

In our News section we highlight some of the big developments in federal funding, such as the new budget and the ongoing controversies around research espionage.

Don’t forget to look at the upcoming deadlines. It’s a busy time of year with opportunities ranging from “Sharjah International Book Fair Translation Grant” to the “NSF’s Perception, Action, Cognition grant.”

After that, be sure to check out upcoming grant opportunities. If you want to see those deadlines throughout the year, go to the Grants Calendar and Fellowship Calendar on the External Grant Opportunities page on the Barnard website. The next internal grant deadline is January 31st. See Barnard’s website here for more information.

As always, if you need assistance finding grants or beginning an application, please feel free to send an email to me or any of the other members of the Institutional Funding and Sponsored Research team.

The AAUW

If you've ever used the word "ecology," enjoyed the daily miracle of drinking water without sewage mixed in, or studied science as a female undergraduate, you can thank Ellen H. Swallows Richards, co-founder of The American Association of University Women (AAUW).

Richards was born in 1842 in Dunstable, Massachusetts, the only child of a shopkeeper and his wife. Though their means were relatively modest, the family had enough money to send her to Westford Academy in Massachusetts, one of the oldest high schools in the U.S. There she learned, among other things, French and German, relatively unusual accomplishments at the time that allowed her easily to find work as a tutor. The money she earned enabled her to enter Vassar. From there, her life became a succession of historic firsts. She was the first woman in the U.S. to earn a degree in chemistry, the first woman admitted to MIT (though with the caveat, "it being understood that her admission did not establish a precedent for the general admission of females"), and the first female lecturer at MIT, establishing its first female-led laboratory. She even prompted the passage of the first food safety laws, after she found chloride in sugar during a study of consumer products.

It was during her time as an (unpaid) lecturer at MIT that Richards met Marion Talbot (1858-1948), daughter of the dean of Boston University Medical School and an activist mother. By the time Talbot began studying with Richards at MIT, she already had an AB and AM from Boston University. Still, the conditions at MIT were hostile enough to women at the time that she briefly dropped out and only finished the degree in 1888. Like Richards, Talbot also went on to have a groundbreaking career. In 1892 she took a position as assistant professor in the Department of Social Science and Anthropology at the newly established University of Chicago and then in 1899 became Dean of Women.

In 1881 Richards and Talbot invited a handful of alumnae from local colleges to what is now seen as the inaugural meeting of the Association of Collegiate Alumnae, the AAUW's predecessor. Gradually, the ACA expanded to include women across the country and in 1885 conducted its first major research project to debunk the belief that excessive education for women caused infertility. In 1889 the ACA merged with the Western Association of College Alumnae, founding the AAUW as we know it. Today the AAUW offers scholarships, fellowships, and funding for community action grants. All deadlines are TBA but will be included in our profiles as they come due.

"Postdoctoral Research Leave Fellowships" are designed to assist scholars in obtaining tenure and other promotions by enabling them to spend a year pursuing independent research. The primary purpose of the fellowship is to increase the number of women in tenure-track faculty positions and to promote equity for women in higher education. Tenured professors are not eligible." Funding: $30,000.

"Short-Term Research Publication Grants" provide funds for women college and university faculty to prepare research for publication. Time must be available for eight consecutive weeks of final writing and editing in response to issues raised in critical reviews. These grants can be awarded to both tenure-track and part-time faculty, and new and established researchers. The grants are designed to assist the candidate in obtaining tenure and other promotions. Tenured professors are not eligible."

Funding: $6,000.

"Community Action Grants" provide funds to individuals, AAUW branches, and AAUW state organizations as well as local community-based nonprofit organizations for innovative programs or non-degree research projects that promote education and equity for women and girls." Funding: $2,000–$7,000 over One Year; $5,000–$10,000 over Two Years.

Sage Advice for Competitive Proposals

Data Visualization

For today's Sage Advice column, I want to draw your attention to a November 12, 2019, article by Betsy Mason titled "Why scientists need to be better at data visualization." You may recall this article from our November issue, where we linked to it in our News section, in which case, carry on! For those of you who haven't read it, though, it's worth looking at Mason's overview of what works, and why, in data presentation.

The problem with current attitudes to data visualization, Mason argues, is that scientists treat it as an afterthought. "As a result, science is littered with poor data visualizations that confound readers and can even mislead the scientists who make them. Deficient data visuals can reduce the quality and impede the progress of scientific research. And with more and more scientific images making their way into the news and onto social media — illustrating everything from climate change to disease outbreaks — the potential is high for bad visuals to impair public understanding of science."

Different charts are better and worse for displaying different types of relationships. A bar chart, for example, is generally easy to read and helpful for situations where the reader needs to see comparisons between average quantities. They fail, however, in cases where the reader wants to see how many data points make up the sample size, whether there are patterns or subgroups within the data, and in small sample sizes where outliers have a disproportionate power to skew the data. (For example, imagine I am comparing the average gift size between two years of fundraising. In one year I receive two donations, one of $1 and one of $999,999. In the other I received 10 gifts of $500,000 each. In both cases, my average gift size is $500,000. In a bar chart, they look exactly equal.)

Color can be an effective way to display data, but only if the researcher avoids some common pitfalls associated with the rainbow color scale and corrects for possible color blindness in the reader. One such problem is that color is not particularly intuitive. It is not obvious whether, for example, blue represents a larger quantity than green. "An even bigger problem," the article continues, "is that the rainbow is perceived unevenly by the human brain. People see color in terms of hue (such as red or blue), saturation (intensity of the color), and lightness (how much white or black is mixed in). Human brains rely most heavily on lightness to interpret shapes and depth and therefore tend to see the brightest colors as representing peaks and darker colors as valleys. But the brightest color in the rainbow is yellow, which is usually found somewhere in the middle of the scale, leading viewers to see high points in the wrong places."

Similarly, heat maps can easily confuse the reader. "A heat map is a two-dimensional matrix, basically a table or grid, that uses color for each square in the grid to represent the values of the underlying data. Lighter and darker shades of one or more hues indicate lower or higher values." Shades, though, can look radically different depending on their surrounding colors, leading readers to misinterpret the values represented on the graph.

Finally, some charts are not very helpful in most cases. The pie chart receives particularly scorn in Mason's article, with one expert writing, "the only design worse than a pie chart is several of them."

FROM THE NSF

“NSF releases JASON report on research security.”
Posted on December 11, 2019.

“For decades, U.S. agencies have worked to foster openness, transparency, and reciprocal international collaboration on basic research (fundamental exploration in science and engineering, which accounts for the majority of the work supported by NSF).

However, today a small group of governments endeavor to benefit from the global research ecosystem without upholding those values. Their tactics include the use of foreign talent recruitment programs with conditions that can require beneficiaries to employ deceptive practices or other behaviors that circumvent the tenets that have allowed international research collaboration to flourish.

NSF and other federal agencies that support research have worked to outline the problem. The independent JASON study affirms the scope and scale of the threat. Four main themes emerged from the JASON study:

- The value of, and need for, foreign scientific talent in the U.S.
- The significant negative impacts of placing new restrictions on access to fundamental research.
- The need to extend our notion of research integrity to include disclosures of commitments and potential conflicts of interest
- The need for a common understanding between academia and U.S. government agencies about how to best protect U.S. interests in fundamental research while maintaining openness and successfully competing in the global marketplace for STEM talent.” <<more>>

“NIH director pledges to move quickly on recommendations to stop sexual harassment”
Posted December 13, 2019 by Jocelyn Kaiser

“An advisory group recently issued a sweeping set of recommendations to crack down on sexual harassment in labs funded by the National Institutes of Health (NIH). The panel’s advice included mandating that NIH-funded institutions report confirmed harassers to NIH as well as broad changes aimed at changing the culture of biomedical science to make it less dominated by white men. NIH Director Francis Collins said he was “supportive of these solid recommendations” and would move immediately to follow up on several of them.” <<more>>

“Stolen Research: Chinese Scientist Is Accused of Smuggling Lab Samples”
From The New York Times by Ellen Barry. Posted December 31, 2019.

“Mr. Zheng’s theft ‘was not an isolated incident,’ prosecutors stated in the motion to hold him without bail. ‘Rather, it appears to have been a coordinated crime, with likely involvement by the Chinese government, as two other Chinese nationals working in the same lab have also stolen biological materials and smuggled them out of the United States.’” <<more>>

“Final 2020 spending bill is kind to U.S. research”
From Science Magazine by Jeffrey Mervis and David Malakoff. Posted December 16, 2020.

“Legislators released details today of how they plan to fund each federal agency for the 2020 fiscal year that ends on 30 September. In almost every case involving science, Congress agreed to give the agency an absolute increase—and much more money than the cuts President Donald Trump had sought for some in his 2020 budget request in February.” <<more>>

Sponsored by the American Economic Association and the National Science Foundation, summer economics fellowships are available to senior graduate students and junior faculty. During their residency, fellows participate as members of the research community while engaged in a research project of their own choosing. Fellows will be mentored by experienced economists both on scientific issues, and career issues such as negotiating publications, the job market, and advancement strategies. Fellows are encouraged to present a research seminar at the sponsoring agency during their fellowship. Fellows are typically either junior faculty, postdocs or graduate students at the dissertation stage. Fellows are to be chosen by the program with the agreement of the sponsoring institution in line with the goal of advancing the participation of women and underrepresented minorities in the economics profession, the fit of a candidate with the activities of the research group at the sponsoring institution, and the value of the proposed research to advancing the sponsoring institution's own goals. “

National Science Foundation Perception, Action & Cognition Research Proposals

Deadline: February 3, 2020

“The PAC program funds theoretically motivated research on a wide-range of topic areas related to typical human behavior with particular focus on perceptual, motor, and cognitive processes and their interactions. Central research topics for consideration by the program include (but are not limited to) vision, audition, haptics, attention, memory, written and spoken language, spatial cognition, motor control, categorization, reasoning, and concept formation. Of particular interest are emerging areas, such as the interaction of sleep or emotion with cognitive or perceptual processes, epigenetics of cognition, computational models of cognition, and cross-modal and multimodal processing. The program welcomes a wide range of perspectives, such as individual differences, symbolic and neural-inspired computation, ecological approaches, genetics and epigenetics, nonlinear dynamics and complex systems, and a variety of methodologies spanning the range of experimentation and modeling.” <<more>>

National Science Foundation Science of Organizations

Deadline: February 2, 2020

National Science Foundation Integrated Earth Systems

Deadline: February 5, 2020

“The FRES program will support research in Earth systems from the core through the critical zone. The project may focus on all or part of the surface, continental lithospheric, and deeper Earth systems over the entire range of temporal and spatial scales. FRES projects should have a larger scientific scope and budget than those considered for funding by disciplinary programs in the Division of Earth Sciences (EAR). FRES projects may be interdisciplinary studies that do not fit well within EAR’s disciplinary programs or cannot be routinely managed by sharing between disciplinary programs. Innovative proposals within a single disciplinary area with outcomes of potential broad relevance to Earth Science research are also encouraged. Investigations may employ any combination of field, laboratory, and computational studies with observational, theoretical, or experimental approaches. Projects should be focused on topics that meet the guidelines for research funded by the Division of Earth Sciences.” <<more>>

Institutes for Advanced Study Women and Mathematics

Deadline: February 17, 2020

“The Women and Mathematics Program (WAM) at the Institute for Advanced Study is an annual program with the mission to recruit and retain more women in mathematics. WAM aims to counter the initial imbalance in the numbers of men and women entering mathematics training as well as the higher attrition rate of female mathematicians compared to their male counterparts at every critical transition stage in mathematical careers. WAM encourages female mathematicians to form collaborative research relationships and to become active in a vertical mentoring network spanning a continuum from undergraduates to emerita professors, which provides support and reduces the sense of isolation experienced by many women in mathematics. While there are a number of women's programs targeted solely at undergraduates, or graduate students, or postdocs, very few programs provide the depth
