

Grant Opportunities & News You Can Use

Hello, faculty,

Welcome to our September Newsletter. We hope you and your students are settling into the semester, strange as it is.

We are back with our normal format this month. For our Featured Funder column, we have a profile of The John Templeton Foundation (a perennial source of fascination for me). Since we are deep into fellowship season, our Sage Advice column offers advice on “How to Make Your Fellowship Application More Concrete.”

After Sage Advice, we have a few news stories, including an advertisement for a webinar for new and early career investigators, co-hosted by the NSF and the University of Florida.

After that, we have brief profiles of upcoming opportunities. A few new have come our way, including a residential fellowship at The Center for Ballet and the Arts at New York University, open to “artists and scholars across disciplines (history, theater, philosophy, and music, among many others) to work on projects that expand the way we think about the history, practice, and performance of dance.” And, as always, we have a calendar of opportunities coming due in the next six months.

The next Internal Grant deadline is October 19, for Barnard Faculty Research Grants.

As always, if you need assistance finding grants or beginning an application, please feel free to email any of the members of the Institutional Funding and Sponsored Research team. We love to hear from you!

The John Templeton Foundation

Have you ever wondered what it would be like to lounge on a Caribbean island on some moonlit night, discussing the theological implications of extraterrestrial intelligence with...Richard Dawkins? Someone at The John Templeton Foundation clearly did, because in 1998 the Foundation gathered together a dozen of the most prominent philosophers, theologians, and scientists in the world (Dawkins included) for a conference titled “Many Worlds: The New Universe and its Theological Implications.” That conference is just one of many eclectic projects The John Templeton Foundation has bankrolled since it was founded in 1987 by the billionaire investor, Sir John Templeton.

John Templeton was born in 1912 in Tennessee. His mother was a housewife, by all accounts stable and kind, but his father, Harvey Maxwell Templeton Sr., bounced around careers throughout Templeton’s early life. He started as a small-town lawyer, then eventually expanded his business to include owning a cotton gin, speculating on the Cotton Exchange, and buying foreclosed houses to rent out. His father’s entrepreneurial spirit inspired Templeton and helped him, to a point, allowing him to enroll at Yale. But his speculations also got the family into trouble. When the Great Depression struck, Harvey Templeton told his son that he would have to pay for college himself. With money from a family loan, a part-time job, and poker winnings, he did, graduating near the top of his class.

After college, Templeton was awarded the Rhodes Scholarship and then began a career as an investment banker. His real break came at the outbreak of World War II. Convinced that the market was unreasonably depressed, he persuaded his boss to lend him $10,000 and used the money to buy stock trading at less than a dollar. His gamble worked. Stocks rebounded and Templeton became rich.

The rest of his career was success building on success, interrupted by the tragic death of his first wife in a car accident, and his decisions in 1964 to renounce U.S. citizenship and move to the Bahamas to avoid paying income tax. Throughout his life, he gave lavishly to causes that interested him, libertarian politics—and perhaps above all else, projects that probe the line between religion and science.

Today, the Templeton Foundation reflects those interests, with current calls in the following areas:

The Science of Purpose Initiative seeks “to identify and fund the development of novel theoretical, philosophical, or scientific concepts useful for advancing the study of goal-directed, goal-seeking, or goal-suited phenomena in nature.” LOI Deadline: November 30, 2020

“The Genetics Funding Area seeks to advance genetics research by supporting novel approaches and contrarian projects, especially research that is undervalued by traditional funding sources. In addition to basic and translational research, this Funding Area supports educational programs that increase public awareness concerning the ways in which genetics-related research and its applications can advance human flourishing at the individual, familial, and societal levels.” Deadline: August 20, 2021

Mathematics and Physical Sciences seeks projects capable of “(1) advancing the conceptual frontiers of physics... (2) Situating scientific research within a broader interdisciplinary inquiry into human thought and culture; (3) Cultivating dynamic and demographically diverse collaborations involving multiple teams, disciplines, or institutions; (4) Providing career continuity for young scholars...whose physics-related research has been disrupted by the Covid-19 pandemic.” LOI Deadline: August 20, 2021

Programs in Latin America. “How do the insights of scholars and religious leaders beyond the Global North and West inform our understanding of profound concerns at the intersection of science, philosophy, and spirituality? And how can such voices be brought into the conversation?” LOI Deadline: August 20, 2021.

Sage Advice

How to Make Your Fellowship Application More Concrete

As I am sure you all know, we are in peak fellowship season, so we are seeing a lot of applications right now. Which is great! We love reading about your projects and we love offering any help we can to strengthen your application, whether that means copyediting for typos or, if you're up for it, giving you more substantive feedback on the structure of your proposal. The influx of proposals is also great for me, because it gives me lots of ideas for columns. Today I want to talk about just one of them—adding concrete detail to your project plan.

Everyone writing a fellowship understands the importance of clearly explaining a project and explaining its stakes, both within the scholarly community and the broader world. But it is remarkably easy to forget to tell the reviewer what you plan to do with your time on the fellowship, I think because it can feel so obvious. Here are some easy solutions to that problem.

Tell the reader if you are writing a book. This suggestion can feel a little silly if you're in the humanities, because what else would you be doing on a fellowship year, if not writing a book? Still, a lot of the big humanities fellowships, like the ACLS, are also open to fields where articles are the norm (philosophy, certain social sciences), so it's best to err on the side of being explicit.

Tell the reader how long the project is. If you are writing a book with five chapters, say so.

Tell the reader how much you have already done. If you have written three of five chapters, great. If you haven't written any chapters but have published some articles on related topics, say that. The key thing is to give the reviewer enough detail to convince them that your project is underway and will reach its destination no matter what. Everyone likes giving a boost to projects bound to succeed; no one likes giving away highly competitive fellowships to a project that might turn out to be a bust.

Tell them which sections of the book you plan on working on. Make sure you say something doable. No one is going to believe you'll write the whole book from scratch in a year (though email me your tricks if you can do that!), so delineate something reasonable. And don't say something vague like you're "doing background research on the book." This project is already well underway, remember? So tell them you're filling out the section on medieval guild records in Chapter 3.

Tell them where you plan to go, if it's a travel fellowship. If you plan on going to a particular library or archive, name it and say how long you'll be there, even if it's just an estimate. And if it's a fellowship from a library, be sure to foreground how important its collection is for your work.

Explain why you need to travel to do your research. An increasing number of artifacts and archives are available online. It may be that your material isn't, that the scans are imperfect, or that you have questions about the material object that can only be answered by examining it in person. Those are all fine reasons to travel to Italy. Be sure to mention them.

Name any potential collaborators at the university you are visiting. If you can say that you are already in conversation, even better.

If you plan on presenting in public, research some possible venues. Could you give a talk to the host department or participate in a regular workshop? You don't need to have confirmed plans, but showing you've thought about it proves that you're serious and that the opportunities exist.

Give a timeline. I know, I know. It'll probably be wrong, but at least show them you've thought about how long you plan on spending on each chapter.

These are all little additions that won't take much time but will help orient your reader.

Enforcement of NSF-approved Biographical Sketch and Current and Pending Support Formats Begins on 10/5/20

By NSF Staff

“The requirement to use an NSF-approved format for preparation of current and pending support will go into effect for new proposals submitted or due on or after October 5, 2020. In the interim, proposers must continue to prepare this document in accordance with the guidance specified in the PAPPG (NSF 20-1). NSF, however, encourages the community to use the NSF-approved formats and provide valuable feedback as we enhance them for the October implementation.” <<more>>

Broadening Participation: 2020 MPS Workshop for New Investigators

Posted by The University of Florida

“Online Workshop on November 9 – 10, 2020

“The University of Florida, in collaboration with the NSF Directorate for Mathematical and Physical Sciences (MPS), will be hosting a workshop for new and future Principal Investigators. New researchers, assistant professors, and exceptional postdocs considering academic career are encouraged to apply. Investigators from underrepresented groups in STEM are especially encouraged to apply. Due to the current COVID-19 situation, this workshop will be online for one and a half days on November 9 and 10, 2020. The main goals of the workshop is two-fold: (1) to provide prospective Principal Investigators who have just received their first award or who are considering applying for funding from the MPS programs with valuable information and advice on the policies, procedures, and opportunities available at NSF, (2) to train a pool of future reviewers and encourage volunteering to review as a way to learn about NSF process. In addition to informational presentations on various topics relevant to the future PI’s, all participants will go through full mock panel review processes in breakout sessions.” <<more>> occur because the applicant or recipient organization is officially closed due to a natural disaster or other emergency. Given the current combination of the existing Presidentially-declared Public Health Emergency concerning COVID-19 and the hurricane disaster, NIH Institutes and Centers may, at their discretion, accept late applications to Funding Opportunity Announcements reviewed at their IC on a case by case basis due to other circumstances than an official closure. In addition, note the following:

“Institutions must submit applications or reports as soon as possible after reopening, not to exceed the number of days the institution was officially closed.

“Institutions must submit a cover letter with the application, with enough detail about the delay so that NIH staff can determine whether circumstances justify accepting the application late.

“Institutions need not request advance permission to submit late due to a disaster-related delay.

“We will continue to monitor the situations closely, identifying ways we can help and publishing any additional information in the NIH Guide for Grants and Contracts.” <<more>>

Climate change denialist given top role at major U.S. science agency

From AAAS, by Scott Waldman. Posted September 14, 2020.

“A controversial researcher who rejects climate science was hired by the U.S. National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) for a senior position, in a move suggesting the Trump administration is asserting growing influence over the study of rising temperatures.

“David Legates, a geography professor at the University of Delaware, has a long history of questioning fundamental climate science and has suggested that an outcome of burning fossil fuels would be a more habitable planet for humans.

“He was hired as deputy assistant secretary of Commerce for observation and prediction, according to a report by NPR.

In Brazil’s wealthiest state, scientists fear a budget plan could cripple research

From AAAS, by Scott Waldman. Posted September 14, 2020.

“Academic researchers in São Paulo, Brazil’s wealthiest and most populous state, are warning that proposed legislation before the state assembly could cripple major universities and long-term research projects. The state is home to three of the most prestigious universities in Latin America and produces 40% of Brazil’s scientific publications.

“The bill, which could be voted on as soon as this week, aims to avoid a forecast 10.4 billion reais ($1.9 billion) shortfall in São Paulo’s 2021 budget, caused in large part by the COVID-19 pandemic. One provision calls for the state’s three major academic institutions—the University of São Paulo (USP), the University of Campinas (Unicamp), and São Paulo State University—to transfer money in their long-term reserve accounts to the state government. The São Paulo Research Foundation (FAPESP), a state agency that funds research and fellowships, would also have to hand over its reserve funds. Together, researchers estimate the accounts hold more than 1 billion reais.

“The move has sparked an outcry among researchers, who note the reserve funds have been key to helping the universities and the foundation cope with economic challenges and pay for long-term projects. If enacted in its current form, the bill “will paralyze all scientific activities in the state of São Paulo,” the Brazilian Academy of Sciences warned in a letter. And it would cause “irreversible damage” to ongoing research, said the Brazilian Society for the Advancement of Science in a statement. More than 110,000 people have signed an online petition issued by the São Paulo Science Academy opposing the bill.” <<more>>

National Science Foundation Developmental Science

Deadline: January 15, 2021

"DS supports basic research that increases our understanding of cognitive, linguistic, social, cultural, and biological processes related to human development across the lifespan. Research supported by this program will add to our knowledge of the underlying developmental processes that support social, cognitive, and behavioral functioning, thereby illuminating ways for individuals to live productive lives as members of society." <<more>>

Whitehall Foundation
Grants-in-Aid and Research Grants

Deadline: January 15, 2021

"The Whitehall Foundation, through its program of grants and grants-in-aid, assists scholarly research in the life sciences. It is the Foundation's policy to assist those dynamic areas of basic biological research that are not heavily supported by Federal Agencies or other foundations with specialized missions. Research grants are available to established scientists of all ages working at accredited institutions in the United States. The Grants-in-Aid program is designed for researchers at the assistant professor level who experience difficulty in competing for research funds because they have not yet become firmly established."

National Science Foundation
Major Research Instrumentation Program

Deadline: January 19, 2021

"The Major Research Instrumentation (MRI) Program serves to increase access to multi-user scientific and engineering instrumentation for research and research training in our Nation's institutions of higher education and not-for-profit scientific/engineering research organizations. An MRI award supports the acquisition or development of a multi-user research instrument that is, in general, too costly and/or not appropriate for support through other NSF programs." <<more>>

National Institutes of Health
Research Dissemination and Implementation
(R18) Grants

Deadline: January 25, 2021

"Dissemination and Implementation (D&I) research is an integral part of the NHLBI's systematic approach to the support of research throughout the biomedical spectrum. D&I research involves extension or adaptation of generally accepted and efficacious interventions that have been previously carried out in well-controlled settings to broader populations or settings. In issuing these guidelines, NHLBI intends to provide information to assist members of the scientific community interested in applying for D&I research grants in the cardiovascular, pulmonary, blood, and sleep areas." <<more>>

National Institutes of Health
Research Education Program (R25) Grants

Deadline: January 25, 2021

"The purpose of this program is to support research education activities that: (a) Complement and/or enhance the training of a workforce to meet the nation's biomedical, behavioral and clinical research needs; (b) Enhance the diversity of the biomedical, behavioral and clinical research workforce; (c) Help recruit individuals with specific specialty or disciplinary backgrounds to research careers in biomedical, behavioral and clinical sciences; or (d) Foster a better understanding of biomedical, behavioral and clinical research and its implications." <<more>>

Simons Foundation Collaboration Grants for Mathematicians

Deadline: January 28, 2021

"The Simons Foundation's Mathematics and Physical Sciences division invites applications for Collaboration Grants for Mathematicians to stimulate collaboration in the field primarily through the funding of travel and related expenditures. The goal of the program is to substantially increase collaborative contacts between accomplished, active mathematicians in the United States who do not otherwise have access to funding that could provide support for travel and visitors.” <<more>>

Grants and Fellowship Opportunities (cont'd)
