

Grant Opportunities & News You Can Use

Hello, faculty,

We are back with a new edition of our Grant Opportunities newsletter and an exciting new announcement: We're adding a new monthly column!

You know already about our monthly Featured Funder columns (this month profiling the Social Science Research Council) and our Sage Advice column (which treats this month the differences between academic and grant writing), but what you might not know is that I have been plotting for quite some time to start a third column, "The History of Philanthropy."

Why? Here at the Institutional Funding and Sponsored Research Office, we spend all day swimming in questions related to grants, private foundations, and government agencies. I'm enough of a humanist that I think you can't really understand where you are unless you understand where you've been. I've already found some delightfully arcane beginnings to American philanthropy, and for this introductory column, I am beginning with the question of who first invented the idea of a trust—the Romans, Crusaders, or Franciscan monks. I hope you'll check it out.

As usual, we also have news and upcoming deadlines. I want to highlight two in particular. The first is Columbia University's Collaboratory Fellows Fund, which awards up to $100,000 to faculty teams within Columbia to develop courses that link data science with other disciplines. Deadline: April 19, 2021. The second is a summer institute at Grinnell College funded by the Mellon Foundation, called "The Humanities in Action: The Future of the Humanities at Liberal Arts Colleges." "This event will feature four days of discussion about curricular and pedagogical change in the humanities, arts, and humanistic social sciences, with a particular focus on two themes: the creation of new gateway courses to welcome students to humanistic study and the development of new opportunities in community-engaged learning. Deadline: March 31, 2021.

The next Internal Grant deadline is March 9, for Presidential Research Awards and nominations for Gildersleeve Visiting Professorships, which "bring visiting scholars, preferably women from abroad, to the Barnard campus." As always, if you need assistance finding grants or beginning an application, please feel free to email. We love to hear from you!

The Social Science Research Council (SSRC)

It's a good thing that Charles Edward Merriam Jr. was better at revolutionizing the social sciences than he was at political campaigning, because by my count, he lost five elections between 1911 and 1919: three for mayor of Chicago, one for presidential nominee for the Progressive party, and one for alderman. Fortunately, Merriam was a gifted scholar and in the course of his long career helped found the Social Science Research Council in 1923 with a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation.

Merriam was born in 1874 in Iowa to Charles Edward Merriam and Margaret Campbell Kirkwood Merriam. His father owned a dry goods store and must have been relatively respected in the community, because he also served as trustee of the local Lenox College, where Charles Edward Jr. went to college. By the time he was 25, he had received his BA, JD, MA and PhD. By the time he was 28, he was working as the first member of the political science department at the University of Chicago and had published A History of American Political Theories, a book that established his credentials as a Progressive and made his career.

Over the course of his career, Merriam became known for advocating a new vision of social science, one that broke from the highly theoretical discussions in Europe and engaged in empirical research. His role in founding the SSRC in 1923 was part of that agenda. From its earliest years, the SSRC stood out as a new type of organization. As it was neither government agency, no university, it was free, in theory, of the politics that sometimes hampered both. Early Progressive founders imagined it as one research organization among others, including the Brookings Institution (1927) and the Council on Foreign Relations (1921), capable of offering unbiased advice to policymakers.

Today, the SSRC defines its mission as building “interdisciplinary and international networks, working with partners around the world to link research to practice and policy, strengthen individual and institutional capacities for learning, and enhance public access to information.” It offers fellowships, workshops, working groups, and prizes to scholars and students, including the following.

The Religion, Spirituality, and Democratic Renewal Fellowship. “The Religion, Spirituality, and Democratic Renewal (RSDR) Fellowship of the Social Science Research Council (SSRC) aims to bring knowledge of the place of religion and spirituality into scholarly and public conversations about renewing democracy in the United States. These fellowships are offered by the SSRC Program on Religion and the Public Sphere with the support and partnership of the Fetzer Institute.” Deadline: April 6, 2021. Funding: Up to $18,000

Transregional Collaboratory on the Indian Ocean. “This year, the Collaboratory invites proposals for 12-month collaborative research grants to conduct fully conceptualized research projects that deepen understanding of the effects of political, economic, and social processes in contexts of profound climate and environmental change in and across Indian Ocean countries. This competition is open to research teams intending to embark on new research projects or to expand research in progress in novel directions.” Deadline: April 26, 2021. Funding Range: Up to $50,000/team.

Sloan Scholars Mentoring Network. “Our 2021 grant competition aims to address some of the unique challenges posed to researchers during this unprecedented time. In recognition of the uncertainty facing academics and the flexibility that may be required on the part of grantors, the SSMN grant guidelines have been adapted with these considerations in mind. Please see the new guidelines below... These grants are only open to PhD graduates of the Sloan Minority PhD Program (Sloan Scholar PhDs).” Deadline: May 1, 2021. Funding: $7,500-20,000.

Sage Advice

Academic Writing vs. Grant Writing

A few months ago, when virtual conference session was in full swing, the various members of our team attended a conference called CLASP (Colleges of Liberal Arts - Sponsored Programs). Mostly, CLASP is a listserv where you can ask questions about small technical issues, share information about the impact of larger national legislation, or even just speculate more generally about the direction of philanthropy.

In the course of the discussions, someone mentioned an article from 2006 called “Why Academics Have a Hard Time Writing Good Grant Proposals,” by Robert Porter, Ph. D. The title is a little combative—lots of you write great grant proposals—but the content is interesting, so I thought I’d share it today.

Academic Writing versus Grant Writing: Contrasting Perspectives

Academic Writing	Grant Writing
Scholarly pursuit: Individual passion	Sponsor goals: Service attitude
Past oriented: Work that has been done	Future oriented: Work that should be done
Theme-centered: Theory and thesis	Project-centered: Objectives and activities
Expository rhetoric: Explaining to reader	Persuasive rhetoric: “Selling” the reader
Impersonal tone: Objective, dispassionate	Personal tone: Conveys excitement
Individualistic: Primarily a solo activity	Team-focused: Feedback needed
Few length constraints: Verbosity rewarded	Strict length constraints: Brevity rewarded
Specialized terminology “Insider jargon”	Accessible language: Easily understood

The most interesting section to me in this table was the contrast between “theme-centered articles” and “project-centered grants.” Here’s what Porter had to say about that point in the body of the text:

Scholarly writers are prone to dwell on theme, thesis and theory. Essays and books can be devoted to the authors’ original thinking, contributions of past and present scholars, or the evolution of entire schools of thought. They draw us into the realm of ideas. Grant writers, however, draw us into a world of action. They start by sketching out an important problem, then they move quickly to describing a creative approach to addressing that problem with a set of activities that will accomplish specific goals and objectives. The overall project is designed to make a significant contribution to a discipline or to a society as a whole. Academic writers often seek funding to “study,” “examine,” or “explore” some theme or issue. But this can be deadly, as sponsors rarely spend money on intellectual exploration. They will, however, consider funding activities to accomplish goals that are important to them.

The article is only a few pages long. It’s worth checking out the rest of it.

The History of Philanthropy

From Charity to Philanthropy: Introduction and Early Precedents

All of the daily work we do in Institutional Funding and Sponsored Research—writing grants, meeting with donors, checking margins, parsing guidelines, reviewing opportunities, writing and rewriting budgets, frantically uploading documents—all of that depends on a subtle historical shift from charity to philanthropy. Charity or almsgiving to the needy has existed, well, I won't say from the dawn of mankind, but for a very long time, in very many forms. Professional philanthropy, with its tax codes, private foundations, grants, and limitations on what donors can and cannot support, is in many ways an idiosyncratically American phenomenon and has a winding but definitely traceable history.

This column chronicles that shift from charity to professional philanthropy. Like any chronicle, its starting point is necessarily somewhat arbitrary, but I have read enough, at least, to know that whoever you want to credit, it certainly shouldn't be the Gilded Age tycoons who we might suspect. Andrew Carnegie, John D. Rockefeller, and others all started their foundations in a country with well-established legal and cultural precedents in place that made their plans for permanent charitable organizations possible. For someone like John D. Rockefeller to start a foundation, you need to have the idea that it's John D. Rockefeller's money to do whatever he pleases with after he dies and that he doesn't have any obligation to keep his estate intact for his children. You need to have a tax code that favors charitable donations. You need to have a codified understanding of what charity is. You need some way for Rockefeller direct what he wants done with his money after he gives it away. Most of all, you need some sort of legal arrangement that allows a third party to manage someone's assets without simply giving them total ownership—which is to say that you need the idea of a trust.

Trusts were certainly not an American idea; like so much of the story I'll be telling in the next few columns, they're a remnant of the British legal code that Americans inherited when they finally won independence in 1783. Whether trusts are a British invention is less clear.

Some accounts trace the idea of trusts back to the Roman concept of fideicommissa, which translates to "to commit to someone's trust." Roman tax laws denied individuals the right to leave property to women, foreigners, and childless individuals, so if a wealthy man wanted to look after his daughter, for example, he would leave the estate to someone else, with the stipulation that his heir had to support the original owner's daughter. Not everyone is convinced that this counts as the beginning of philanthropic trusts; it only applied after death and was really about inheritance, not charitable works.

The better-known story traces the invention of trusts back to the Crusades. Starting in the twelfth century, British lords would suit up their armor and sail for the Holy Land, leaving their lands behind in the care of a trusted steward. After years of mostly disastrously unsuccessful war, they would return to England, ride up to their ancestral lands, and meet.....a steward who had absolutely no interest in giving back the village he had been quite literally lording over for years. And since there was no law in place enforcing the original owners claim, the steward had a reasonably good chance of keeping the land unless something changed, which is how the British courts came to invent the idea of a trust.

The final story gives credit to the Franciscans, a mendicant order founded in 1209 by the radical Christian reformer, Francis of Assisi. Men were required to give up all their earthly possessions in order to join, but authorities could accept gifts on the monks' behalf as something like a dowry. Sometimes the gifts were permanent; sometimes they followed another Roman tradition of usufruct, in which the Church could benefit from the fruits of the donated land, but would have to return the property after the monk died. Whatever the origin story, by the end of the medieval period some of the basic preconditions of professional philanthropy were in place. Next came government regulation.

NSF and Amazon collaborate to advance fairness in AI

Posted on February 10, 2021 by NSF Staff

“From personalized music playlists to improved health care, artificial intelligence continues to enhance daily life. The field of AI moves quickly, making it important to understand how to ensure that this technology is fair, transparent, accountable, inclusive and beneficial to all. The U.S. National Science Foundation leads the nation’s investments in university research to answer these challenging questions, exploring everything from the theoretical foundations of machine learning to the social and economic impacts of AI. This basic research unlocks new knowledge, while partnerships with industry stakeholders can enhance the ability to answer crucial questions about the fairness of AI systems. Embedding new concepts and methods in real-world systems ensures relevance to solving societal challenges. In collaboration with Amazon, NSF is pleased to announce the 2021 awardees of its Program on Fairness in Artificial Intelligence. The program supports computational research focused on fairness in AI, with the goal of building trustworthy AI systems that can be deployed to tackle grand challenges facing society.” <<more>>

Keeping on Top of NIH-Funded Research You Care the Most About Just Got Easier

Posted on February 16, 2021 by Mike Lauer

“Last fall, we launched our newly revamped RePORTER site which made it easy to find information about specific NIH supported grants, investigators, and institutions. Today, we are adding to RePORTER’s functionality with a modernized version of MyRePORTER so you can stay on top of the research you care the most about.

With MyRePORTER, you can save searches and set customized weekly email alerts that are sent when new projects are funded or new publications are linked to projects in your search. Email alerts will provide a summary listing of the new items, with hyperlinks to bring you back to MyRePORTER to get more information about the projects and publications.” <<more>>

U.S. scientists want Congress to look into complaints of racial profiling in China Initiative

From Science Magazine by Jeffrey Mervis. Posted on February 25, 2021

“Scientists and civil rights organizations are ramping up pressure on Congress and President Joe Biden’s administration to examine whether the U.S. government has been unfairly targeting Chinese-American researchers in an effort to protect government-funded research from foreign influences. This week, they asked a prominent member of Congress to hold a hearing on a U.S. law enforcement initiative that has resulted in criminal or civil charges against prominent U.S. academic scientists engaged in work with Chinese institutions. They see the hearing—which could occur as early as next month—as a possible first step toward satisfying a second request, directed to Biden last month, to reform or dismantle the Department of Justice’s (DOJ’s) China Initiative, begun in 2018. “ <<more>>

Pandemic hit academic mothers especially hard, new data confirm

From Science Magazine by Katie Langin. Posted on February 5, 2021

“In March 2020, Reshma Jagsi—a radiation oncologist at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor—wrote an opinion piece predicting female scientists would feel a disproportionate impact from the COVID-19 pandemic. Skeptical journal editors declined to publish it. Since then, though, many commentators have echoed her message. And now the evidence has become clear: The pandemic has exacerbated existing disparities and created additional challenges for women, especially those with children, struggling to maintain their research productivity.

“In some fields, studies show, the proportion of female authors on preprints, submitted manuscripts, and published papers dropped during the first few months of the pandemic. Mothers also suffered a 33% larger drop in research hours compared with fathers, according to a global survey of 20,000 Ph.D. holders published as a National Bureau of Economic Research working paper last month. The survey, conducted from May to July 2020, also found that mothers took on more household and child care duties than fathers.” <<more>>

Research and Evaluation on Violence Against Women

Deadline: April 27, 2021

"With this solicitation, NIJ seeks proposals for rigorous research and evaluation projects to support the development of objective and independent knowledge and validated tools to reduce violence against women (VAW) (including violence against elderly women and American Indian and Alaska Native women and girls), promote justice for victims of crime, and enhance criminal justice responses. For that reason, this solicitation seeks applications for grant funding to conduct research and evaluation projects examining a broad range of topics, including the crimes of domestic and family violence, homicide, intimate partner and dating violence, rape, sexual assault, stalking, and sex trafficking, along with the associated criminal justice system response, procedures, and policies." American Political Science Association
Small Research Grant Program

Deadline: April 30, 2021

"The APSA Small Research Grant Program supports research in all fields of political science. The intent of these grants is to provide funding opportunities for research conducted by political scientists not employed at PhD-granting departments in the field, or who are in non-tenure track or contingent positions ineligible for departmental funding."

LANGUAGE & AREA STUDIES

National Endowment for the Humanities
Fellowships for Advanced Social Science Research in Japan

Deadline: April 28, 2021

"The Fellowships for Advanced Social Science Research on Japan program is a joint activity of the Japan-U.S. Friendship Commission (JUSFC) and the National Endowment for the Humanities. Awards support research on modern Japanese society and political economy, Japan's international relations, and U.S.-Japan relations. The program encourages innovative research that puts these subjects in wider regional and global contexts and is comparative and contemporary in nature. Research should contribute to scholarly knowledge or to the general public's understanding of issues of concern to Japan and the United States. Appropriate disciplines for the research include anthropology, economics, geography, history, international relations, linguistics, political science, psychology, public administration, and sociology. Awards usually result in articles, monographs, books, digital materials, archaeological site reports, translations, editions, or other scholarly resources." <<more>>

STEM

(SCIENCE, TECHNOLOGY, ENGINEERING, AND MATHEMATICS)

Whitehall Foundation
Research Grants and Grants-in-Aid

Deadline: April 15, 2021

"The Whitehall Foundation, through its program of grants and grants-in-aid, assists scholarly research in the life sciences. It is the Foundation's policy to assist those dynamic areas of basic biological research that are not heavily supported by Federal Agencies or other foundations with specialized missions. In order to respond to the changing environment, the Whitehall Foundation periodically reassesses the need for financial support by the various fields of biological research.

Grants and Fellowship Opportunities (cont'd)

The Foundation emphasizes the support of young scientists at the beginning of their careers and productive senior scientists who wish to move into new fields of interest. " <<more>>

National Institutes of Health Team-Based Design in Biomedical Engineering Education (R25)

Deadline: April 26, 2021

"Applications are encouraged from institutions that propose to establish new or to enhance existing team-based design courses or programs in undergraduate biomedical engineering departments or other degree-granting programs with biomedical engineering tracks/minors. This FOA targets the education of undergraduate biomedical engineering/bioengineering students in a team-based environment. While current best practices such as multidisciplinary/interdisciplinary education, introduction to the regulatory pathway and other issues related to the commercialization of medical devices, and clinical immersion remain encouraged components of a strong BME program, this FOA also challenges institutions to propose other novel, innovative and/or ground-breaking activities that can form the basis of the next generation of biomedical engineering design education." <<more>>

Elsa U Pardee Foundation

Deadline: April 30, 2021

"The Elsa U. Pardee Foundation funds research to investigators in United States non-profit institutions proposing research directed toward identifying new treatments or cures for cancer. The Foundation funds projects for a one year period which will allow establishment of capabilities of new cancer researchers, or new cancer approaches by established cancer researchers. It is anticipated that this early stage funding by the Foundation may lead to subsequent and expanded support using government agency funding. Project relevance to cancer detection, treatment, or cure should be clearly identified. By design, there are no limits set on the grant amount that can be requested. It must be reasonably and clearly supported by the scope of the project outlined in the application. Applications requesting more than 5% overhead are usually not considered. Papers verifying nonprofit status and relevant human subject and experimental animal treatment approvals from the recipient institution will be requested prior to project initiation. A final report summarizing financial expenditure and research achievement is required." <<more>>
