Grant Opportunities & News You Can Use

Hello, faculty,

Welcome to the last stretch of the semester! We're back with another edition of our Grant Opportunities Newsletter. Let's jump in.

This month we have a Featured Funder column on new opportunities from the NEH. (And by new, I mean opportunities that have cropped up in recent years and you might not have noticed.) For Sage Advice, we have an article explaining what, exactly, big funders like the NEH, Mellon, and the ACLS mean when they invite humanists to apply, and how to tell if you might be eligible, even if you're in a social science department. For The History of American Philanthropy, we have officially crossed over into the history of the United States! This chapter really sets up the practical issues that arise when you're trying to set up a new legal system as a country.

We have news stories and brief thumbnails of opportunities coming due in January. And in the back, we have six months' worth of deadlines.

The next Internal Grants Deadline is January 25th, for Barnard Faculty Research Grants and for Tow Award for Innovative and Outstanding Pedagogy Proposals.

That's it for us. Please reach out if we can be of any help.

New Opportunities from the National Endowment for the Humanities

It has been a few years since our newsletter has covered the National Endowment for the Humanities (started in 1965 by Lyndon Johnson, in case you were wondering) and I thought it might be a good time to publicize some of the newer and less widely known initiatives. Most people know about the NEH's Fellowships (Funding: Up to $60k. Deadline: April 13, 2022) and Summer Stipends (Funding: $6k. Deadline: September 21, 2022), but the NEH offers a number of curricular awards, as well as tailored fellowships and support for libraries. Check out these options below.

Humanities Connections "support innovative curricular approaches that foster partnerships among humanities faculty and their counterparts in the social and natural sciences and in pre-service or professional programs (such as business, engineering, health sciences, law, computer science, and other technology-driven fields), in order to encourage and develop new integrative learning opportunities for students." Funding: Up to $150k. Deadline: TBA. Previously September 14, 2021.

"Humanities Initiatives at Colleges and Universities strengthen the teaching and study of the humanities … by developing new humanities programs, resources (including those in digital format), or courses, or by enhancing existing ones. Projects must be organized around a core topic or set of themes drawn from such areas of study in the humanities as history, philosophy, religion, literature, and composition and writing skills." Funding: Up to $150k. Deadline: May 19, 2022.

"The Preservation and Access Education and Training program supports the development of knowledge and skills among professionals responsible for preserving and establishing access to humanities collections… Awards support projects that prepare the next generation of preservation professionals, as well as projects that introduce heritage practitioners to new information and advances in preservation and access practices." Funding: Up to $350,000. Deadline: March 18, 2022.

"The Archaeological and Ethnographic Field Research program makes awards to institutions and organizations conducting empirical field research to answer significant questions in the humanities… Projects may be led by individuals with institutional affiliation or by teams of collaborating scholars from the same or multiple eligible institutions. Awards provide up to three years of support for fieldwork and data processing." Funding: Up to $150,000. Deadline: September 28, 2022.

"The Dynamic Language Infrastructure – Documenting Endangered Languages (DLI-DEL) Fellowships are offered as part of a joint, multi-year funding program of NEH and the National Science Foundation (NSF) to develop and advance scientific and scholarly knowledge concerning endangered human languages." Funding: Up to $60k. Deadline: September 14, 2022.

"The Dialogues on the Experience of War program supports the study and discussion of important humanities sources about war, in the belief that these sources can help U.S. military veterans and others think more deeply about the issues raised by war and military service. Project teams should include humanities scholars, military veterans, and individuals with relevant experience." Funding: Up to $100k. Deadline: TBA. Previously October 14, 2021.

"The Digital Projects for the Public program supports projects that interpret and analyze humanities content in primarily digital platforms and formats, such as websites, mobile applications and tours, interactive touch screens and kiosks, games, and virtual environments." Funding: Up to $400k. Deadline: June 8, 2022.

Sage Advice

Who Counts as a Humanist, Anyway?

Once when I was a postdoc at Princeton, one of the faculty members remarked to me, "Oh, but this is a great year on the market for you. There are a ton of religion and social science jobs." To say that I was taken aback would be an understatement. Reader, my degree is in philosophy of religion. I studied dead Germans who made up myths about the birth of God. Long dead guys who just sat down in their studies, sharpened their quills, and thought, "eh, I bet this is the nature of the Absolute," and went from there. Sure, they often thought that they were being rigorously scientific, but they also believed in phrenology, the idea that women passively absorbed information like plants absorb sunlight, and the possibility of communicating with the dead—not to mention that at least one of them was withholding judgment on whether or not there were human populations with tails. I don't know what sort of flimflam his colleagues were feeding him, but my field was decidedly not a social science.

But the broader question of who counts as a social scientist and who counts as a humanist is a complicated one, especially for the purposes of grant applications. Just because you are in a traditional social science department, like economics or political science, doesn't mean that you are automatically disqualified from applying to fellowships meant for humanists. To figure out if you might be eligible, your best bet is to look at the standard definition of the humanities, established by the NEH and used by funders like the ACLS and Mellon Foundation.

"According to the 1965 National Foundation on the Arts and the Humanities Act, 'The term 'humanities' includes, but is not limited to, the study of the following: language, both modern and classical; linguistics; literature; history; jurisprudence; philosophy; archaeology; comparative religion; ethics; the history, criticism and theory of the arts; those aspects of the social sciences which have humanistic content and employ humanistic methods; and the study and application of the humanities to the human environment with particular attention to reflecting our diverse heritage, traditions, and history and to the relevance of the humanities to the current conditions of national life.'"

Elsewhere, the NEH notes, "Applications must clearly articulate a project's value to humanities scholars, general audiences, or both."

The key language here is "those aspects of the social sciences which have humanistic content and employ humanistic methods." So what might that include?
    *History of economics, history of science, history of architecture—you get the idea.
    *Relatedly, anything that involves archival work, oral history, or ethnography.
    *Philological work. Are you tracing the evolution of a concept or a word? That counts.
    *Analysis of material culture, like art, music, performance, etc.
    *Broadly, anything you might consider qualitative, rather than quantitative analysis.

Your project doesn't need to consist entirely of humanistic methods, but you should be able to make a good case that it's a substantial part of your project. If you're applying for something like the NEH Summer Stipend, it might be helpful to propose to work on the part of your project that most closely aligns with humanistic methods and questions during your weeks on the grant.

You can also make the case for the humanistic relevance of your work by talking about humanistic questions or frameworks. There are plenty of frameworks to choose from—affect theory, material culture, gender studies, and so on. You do have to show your work, though; if you want to claim that you are in conversation with humanists, you have to talk about and cite specific writers in your proposal. If all this seems like too much of a stretch, you might not be a fit and that's fine. But don't rule yourself out without thinking about it!

The History of American Philanthropy

Imagine this: It's 1783 and you've just defeated one of the major world powers in a war that dragged on for the better part of a decade. You're finally an independent country, free to make your own treaties with foreign powers, set your own taxes, and write your own laws. The foreign troops withdraw, your army can go home, and you can settle down to ruling a country.

What laws do you use?

Up until now, I've been telling the story of the history of philanthropy in the North American colonies—what religious beliefs the colonist brought to the continent, how their views on inheritance and philanthropy grew out of their complicated relationship to colonialism, and the ways that they sometimes accepted, sometimes resisted the British charitable laws they inherited. The fault lines had been clear enough. The colonists were largely less likely to challenge charitable bequests than English courts, partly because they needed those gifts to establish social services and partly because, as a population heavily mixed with religious dissenters, they just didn't worry as much about funneling too much money to the Church in the way King and Parliament had for centuries. There was no singular "Church" capable of monopolizing all the land and revenue, just a conglomeration of distinct churches.

But having a different culture around philanthropy is very different from having a different set of laws, and there are all sorts of practical concerns that arise when you really think about starting a new country from scratch. Should you scrap the old laws and start over with new ones? If so, what laws do you use while you're in the middle of drafting new ones? People don't stop dying and leaving complicated wills for their heirs to sort out just because you're trying to rethink the legal code. And what do you turn to when looking for legal precedent? Can you still use the cases decided under the old system?

Compounding the problem was the broader question of how centralized the government would be. Especially during the early years of the Articles of Confederation, the question of legal codes was largely left to the states. Massachusetts, along with New Jersey, Virginia, Delaware, South Carolina, New Hampshire, and New York all published laws or added riders to their state constitutions allowing British law to continue but insisting that the legislature could overturn laws as it saw fit.

No one was exactly happy with this solution. It was messy, ad hoc, and inconsistent. It meant that you could get different legal rulings on inheritances, depending on the state where you lived and died, though half the time you wouldn't be able to know how inconsistent your ruling was, because it might take years to publish legal rulings. Just think of it—a handful of decentralized courts trying to build a national legal tradition in a time when news traveled on horseback.

Still, states did the best they could to retain what worked and jettison what didn't. But all their best efforts never quite quelled the grumbling that it was impossible to build a republic on the basis of aristocratic laws. Thomas Jefferson came to believe that all laws should be rewritten every two decades. As he wrote to James Madison:

> No society can make a perpetual constitution, or even a perpetual law. The earth belongs always to the living generation. They may manage it then, and what proceeds from it, as they please, during their usufruct. They are masters too of their own persons, and consequently may govern them as they please. But persons and property make the sum of the objects of government. The constitution and the laws of their predecessors extinguished then in their natural course with those who gave them being. This could preserve that being till it ceased to be itself, and no longer. Every constitution then, and every law, naturally expires at the end of 19 years. If it be enforced longer, it is an act of force, and not of right.

The confusion of precedent and the fear that British laws were incompatible with American culture would only continue to grow, taking particular force in the run-up to the war of 1812.

Your Project Titles Matter, Choose Wisely

November 1, 2021 by Division of Environmental Biology Science Staff

"Project titles matter because they partially determine who will end up reviewing your proposals. Unlike the situation with journals, where an editor can share the abstract of a manuscript with a potential reviewer, all NSF can share is the title. This comes into play in two important ways:

"First, when we put together a panel, we strive to find panelists with a broad diversity of interests to cover the broad diversity of proposal topics in a typical panel. A major challenge is to figure out the best matches of panelist expertise with proposal topics. To help in doing so, we send each panelist a complete list of proposal titles and ask them to rank each from 1 ("I'd love to review this one and have the necessary expertise") to 4 ("I'm clueless or disinterested"). Although we sometimes overrule those rankings, we certainly pay attention to them. Here's the point: If you want your proposal to be reviewed by someone who can best appreciate your project and provide the most constructive feedback, your title is pivotal. Make sure it concisely summarizes what your proposal is about and stay away from vague or grand statements.

"Second, the same challenge of matching reviewers to proposals comes into play when Program Officers solicit reviews from ad hoc reviewers (i.e., reviewers who are not panelists)." [<<more>>]

Expanded Website Outlines How to Support Safe and Respectful Workplaces at Institutions that Receive NIH Funding

By Mike Lauer. Posted October 29, 2021

"We have updated our anti-sexual harassment website to encompass the range of threats to safe and respectful workplaces at institutions receiving NIH funding. The updated site outlines actions NIH can take to address different forms of harassment, how to notify us (which can be anonymous), resources to evaluate workplace climate, and frequently asked questions. It also has a new section where you can easily find information on the numbers and types of harassment cases NIH handles involving projects at NIH-supported institutions, and the resulting actions." <<more>>

More Data on Applications Submitted During the Pandemic

By Mike Lauer. Posted October 20, 2021

"The vast majority of applications were Type 1s during this cycle, but overall there was a 2 percent decrease in the number of R01-equivalent applications submitted this year compared to last. The percentage of applications from men only has decreased, and from women only has remained relatively stable. The percentage of multi-PI applications with men and women increased. As it relates to race, the proportion of applications with white only investigators decreased, went up for applications where multiple investigators with different races were identified (mixed), and held relatively steady for Asians and underrepresented minorities (URMs). The latter group includes black/African Americans, Pacific Islanders, and American Indians, and though their percentage remained relatively stable, they still made up a small fraction of the larger applicant pool." <<more>>

Announcement of Childcare Costs for Ruth L. Kirschstein National Research Service Award Institutional Research Training Awards

By Mike Lauer. Posted October 8, 2021

"NIH began providing childcare cost support to recipients of full-time National Research Service Awards (NRSA) fellowships this past April (see this blog). We recognize that the high cost of childcare effects graduate students and post-doctorates funded through NRSA fellowships and can impact their ability to successfully complete their training and fully participate in the extramural research workforce. Since then, questions arose about when childcare cost support may be available to NRSA trainees. We are pleased to announce that NIH will now begin providing childcare cost support to full-time predoctoral and postdoctoral trainees appointed on NRSA institutional research training awards. This is anticipated for awards made beginning in the first quarter of Fiscal Year 2022." <<more>>

New Financial Assistance Transparency Reporting Requirements (OMB M-22-02)

From Executive Office of the President. Posted on October 26, 2021.

"The Federal Funding Accountability and Transparency Act (FFATA), as amended by the Digital Accountability and Transparency Act (DATA Act), requires the Federal Government to increase the availability, accuracy, and usefulness of online information regarding Federal spending. Specifically, it requires Federal agencies to link and report disparate and historically siloed budget, financial, and award-related Federal data in an easily searchable, downloadable, uniform, and consistent display to the public. Over the past several years, successful implementation of the DATA Act enabled for the first time a more

Few foundations give groups they support decision-making power on funding priorities

From The Conversation by Beth Daley. Posted November 2, 2021.

"Eighty-three percent of large U.S. foundations seek input from some of the nonprofits they fund – along with other people, organizations or communities directly affected by their funding. But foundations, which aim to serve the public interest through the money they give away, rarely give these stakeholders decision-making authority – by either letting them help set priorities or giving them a say about where grant money flows. That is what philanthropy scholars Kelly Husted, David Suarez and I found in a study that assessed the practices of the 500 largest U.S. foundations. Our findings suggest that foundations, which face mounting pressure to direct more grants to underserved communities as part of the widespread reckoning on race underway in America, have incorporated some stakeholder outreach into their work." <<more>>

"DS supports research that addresses developmental processes within the domains of cognitive, social, emotional, and motor development across the lifespan by working with any appropriate populations for the topics of interest including infants, children, adolescents, adults, and non-human animals. The program also supports research investigating factors that affect developmental change including family, peers, school, community, culture, media, physical, genetic, and epigenetic influences. Additional priorities include research that: incorporates multidisciplinary, multi-method, microgenetic, and longitudinal approaches; develops new methods, models, and theories for studying development; includes participants from a range of ethnicities, socioeconomic backgrounds, and cultures; and integrates different processes (e.g., memory, emotion, perception, cognition), levels of analysis (e.g., behavioral, social, neural), and time scales." <<link>>

National Science Foundation
Cultural Anthropology Program Senior Research Awards
Deadline: January 15, 2022
"The primary objective of the Cultural Anthropology Program is to support fundamental, systematic anthropological research and training to increase understanding of the causes, consequences, and complexities of human social and cultural variability. The Cultural Anthropology Program welcomes proposals from researchers in all sub-fields of cultural anthropology and research at any temporal and spatial scale. Methodologies and approaches employed may include ethnographic field research, surveys, remote sensing, the collection of bio-markers, experimental research inside or outside of laboratory settings, archival research, the analysis of materials collections and extant data bases, mathematical and computational modeling, and other research tools as appropriate for the research proposed. The overarching research goals should be to produce empirically grounded findings that will be generalizable beyond particular case studies and contribute to building a more robust anthropological science of human society and culture." <<link>>

National Science Foundation
Sociology
Deadline: January 15, 2022
"The Sociology Program supports basic research on all forms of human social organization -- societies, institutions, groups and demography -- and processes of individual and institutional change. The Program encourages theoretically focused empirical investigations aimed at improving the explanation of fundamental social processes. Included is research on organizations and organizational behavior, population dynamics, social movements, social groups, labor force participation, stratification and mobility, family, social networks, socialization, gender, race and the sociology of science and technology. The Program supports both original data collections and secondary data analysis that use the full range of quantitative and qualitative methodological tools.

Theoretically grounded projects that offer methodological innovations and improvements for data collection and analysis are also welcomed."

National Science Foundation
Linguistics
Deadline: January 15, 2022
"The Linguistics Program supports basic science in the domain of human language, encompassing investigations of the grammatical properties of individual human languages, and of natural language in general. Research areas include syntax, semantics, morphology, phonetics, and phonology.
The program encourages projects that are interdisciplinary in methodological or theoretical perspective, and that address questions that cross disciplinary boundaries, such as (but not limited to):
What are the psychological processes involved in the production, perception, and comprehension of language?
What are the computational properties of language and/or the language processor that make fluent production, incremental comprehension or rapid learning possible?
How do the acoustic and physiological properties of speech inform our theories of natural language and/or language processing?
What role does human neurobiology play in shaping the various grammatical properties of language?
How does language develop in children?
What social and cultural factors underlie language variation and change?" <<link>>

Research on the Science and Technology Enterprise: Indicators, Statistics, and Methods (NCSES S&T)
Deadline: January 18, 2022
"The Center would like to enhance its efforts to support analytic and methodological research in support of its surveys, and to engage in the education and training of researchers in the use of large-scale nationally representative datasets. NCSES welcomes efforts by the research community to use NCSES data for research on the science and technology enterprise, to develop improved survey methodologies for NCSES surveys, to create and improve indicators of S&T activities and resources, and strengthen methodologies to analyze and disseminate S&T statistical data. To that end, NCSES invites proposals for individual or multi-investigator research projects, doctoral dissertation improvement awards, workshops, experimental research, survey research and data collection and dissemination projects under its program for Research on the Science and Technology Enterprise: Statistics and Surveys." <<link>>

Science of Learning and Augmented Intelligence
Deadline: January 19, 2022
"The Science of Learning program supports potentially transformative basic research to advance the science of learning. The goals of the SL Program are to develop basic theoretical insights and fundamental knowledge about learning principles, processes and constraints. Projects that are integrative and/or interdisciplinary may be especially valuable in moving basic understanding of learning forward but research with a single discipline or methodology is also appropriate if it addresses basic scientific questions in learning. The possibility of developing connections between proposed research and specific scientific, technological, educational, and workforce challenges will be considered as valuable broader impacts, but are not necessarily central to the intellectual merit of proposed research. The program will support research addressing learning in a wide range of domains at one or more levels of analysis including: molecular/cellular mechanisms; brain systems; cognitive affective, and behavioral processes; and social/cultural influences. The program supports a variety of methods including: experiments, field studies, surveys, secondary-data analyses, and modeling."

LANGUAGES AND AREA STUDIES

Johns Hopkins American Society for Eighteenth-Century Studies
Women's Caucus Editing and Translation Fellowship
Deadline: January 10, 2022
"The ASECS Women's Caucus Editing and Translation Fellowship, is an annual award of $1000 to support an editing or a translation work in progress of an eighteenth-century primary text on a feminist or a Women's Studies subject. Editing and translation work of eighteenth-century texts in languages other than English are eligible. The award is open to all members of ASECS who have received a PhD. Proposals from Emeritae/i faculty that do not already have professional support for the project will also be considered. The award is meant to fund works in progress, commensurate in scope with a scholarly article-length project to a longer scholarly and/or a classroom edition with a strong scholarly basis for which research and work is well under way, rather than work that is already completed.
To be eligible for the prize, projects must translate and/or edit works by eighteenth-century women writers or works that significantly advance our understanding of women's experiences in the eighteenth century or offer a feminist analysis of any aspect of eighteenth-century culture and/or society. Projects typically fall within the period from 1660 to 1820." <<link>>

National Endowment for the Arts
Translation Project Fellowship
Deadline: January 12, 2022
"Through its fellowships in literary translation, the NEA supports the new translation of fiction, creative nonfiction, poetry, and drama into English. Among this year's projects are award winning novels, short stories, poetry, and a play from 15 languages and five continents, including works from Japan, Madagascar, and India. In addition, most of the translated works are appearing for the first time in English and ten of them are by female authors." <<link>>

STEM
(SCIENCE, TECHNOLOGY, ENGINEERING, AND MATHEMATICS)

American Psychological Association
APA Congressional Fellowship
Deadline: January 3, 2022
"The purpose of this fellowship is to provide psychologists with an invaluable public policy learning experience, to contribute to the more effective use of psychological knowledge in government and to broaden awareness about the value of psychology-government interaction among psychologists and within the federal government. Fellows spend one year working on the staff of a member of Congress or congressional committee. Activities may involve drafting legislation, conducting oversight work, assisting with congressional hearings and events, and preparing briefs and speeches. Fellows also attend a two-week orientation program on congressional and executive branch operations, which provides guidance for the congressional placement process, and participate in a yearlong seminar series on science and public policy issues. The American Association for the Advancement of Science (AAAS) administers these professional development activities for the APA fellows and for fellows sponsored by over two dozen other professional societies." <<link>>

Brain Research Foundation
Seed Grant
Deadline: January 4, 2022
"Brain Research Foundation supports neuroscience research that leads to advanced understanding of brain function in children and adults. This Foundation is committed to advance discoveries that will lead to novel treatments and prevention of all neurological diseases."
"Brain Research Foundation's Fay/Frank Seed Grant Program was founded in 1981 with the goal of providing start-up money for new and innovative research projects that have the potential to become competitive for an NIH grant or other external funding sources. Our goal is to have this grant succeed in opening future opportunities for research, collaboration and scientific advancement." <<link>>

McKnight Foundation
Scholars Award
Deadline: January 10, 2022
"The McKnight Endowment Fund for Neuroscience supports innovative research designed to bring science closer to the day when diseases of the brain can be accurately diagnosed, prevented, and treated. To this end, the McKnight Endowment Fund for Neuroscience invites applications for the 2018 McKnight Scholar Awards.
Background: These awards were established to encourage emerging neuroscientists to focus on disorders of learning and memory. Applicants for the McKnight Scholar Award must demonstrate interest in solving important problems in relevant areas of neuroscience, including the translation of basic research to clinical neuroscience. Awards are given to exceptional young scientists who hold the M.D. and/or Ph.D. degree and who are in the early stages of establishing an independent laboratory and research career. Traditionally, successful candidates have held faculty positions for at least one year." <<link>>

Whitehall Foundation
Grants-in-Aid
Deadline: January 15, 2022
"The Whitehall Foundation, through its program of grants and grants-in-aid, assists scholarly research in the life sciences. It is the Foundation's policy to assist those dynamic areas of basic biological research that are not heavily supported by Federal Agencies or other foundations with specialized missions. In order to respond to the changing environment, the Whitehall Foundation periodically reassesses the need for financial support by the various fields of biological research. The Foundation emphasizes the support of young scientists at the beginning of their careers and productive senior scientists who wish to move into new fields of interest. Consideration is given, however, to applicants of all ages….
The Foundation is currently interested in basic research in neurobiology, defined as follows: Invertebrate and vertebrate (excluding clinical) neurobiology, specifically investigations of neural mechanisms involved in sensory, motor, and other complex functions of the whole organism as these relate to behavior. The overall goal should be to better understand behavioral output or brain mechanisms of behavior."

"Research grants are available to established scientists of all ages working at accredited institutions in the United States. The Grants-in-Aid program is designed for researchers at the assistant professor level who experience difficulty in competing for research funds because they have not yet become firmly established. Grants-in-Aid can also be made to senior scientists." These grants cannot exceed $30,000." <<link>>

American Chemical Society
ACS Community Recognition Grants
Deadline: January 15, 2022
"The American Chemical Society recognizes activities at the community level and provides grants to support programs that advance the public's understanding of chemistry." <<link>>

National Science Foundation
Advancing Informal STEM Learning (AISL)
Deadline: January 18, 2022
"The Advancing Informal STEM Learning (AISL) program seeks to advance new approaches to and evidence-based understanding of the design and development of STEM learning opportunities for the public in informal environments; provide multiple pathways for broadening access to and engagement in STEM learning experiences; advance innovative research on and assessment of STEM learning in informal environments; and engage the public of all ages in learning STEM in informal environments. The AISL program supports six types of projects: (1) Pilots and Feasibility Studies, (2) Research in Service to Practice, (3) Innovations in Development, (4) Broad Implementation, (5) Literature Reviews, Syntheses, or Meta-Analyses, and (6) Conferences." <<link>>

National Science Foundation
Major Research Instrumentation - Internal Contact
Deadline: January 19, 2022
"The Major Research Instrumentation (MRI) Program serves to increase access to multi-user scientific and engineering instrumentation for research and research training in our Nation's institutions of higher education and not-for-profit scientific/engineering research organizations. An MRI award supports the acquisition or development of a multi-user research instrument that is, in general, too costly and/or not appropriate for support through other NSF programs. MRI provides support to acquire critical research instrumentation without which advances in fundamental science and engineering research may not otherwise occur. MRI also provides support to develop next-generation research instruments that open new opportunities to advance the frontiers in science and engineering research. Additionally, an MRI award is expected to enhance research training of students who will become the next generation of instrument users, designers and builders." <<link>>

National Science Foundation
Biological Anthropology
Deadline: January 25, 2022
"The Biological Anthropology Program supports basic research in areas related to human evolution and contemporary human biological variation. Research areas supported by the program include, but are not limited to, human genetic variation, human and nonhuman primate ecology and adaptability, human osteology and bone biology, human and nonhuman primate paleontology, functional anatomy, and primate socioecology. Grants supported in these areas are united by an underlying evolutionary framework, and often by a consideration of adaptation as a central theoretical theme. Proposals may also have a biocultural or bioarchaeological orientation. The program frequently serves as a bridge within NSF between the social and behavioral sciences and the natural and physical sciences, and proposals commonly are jointly reviewed and funded with other programs." <<link>>

National Institute of Health
Research Dissemination and Implementation (R18) Grants
Deadline: January 25, 2022
"R18 is the Dissemination and Implementation (D&I) grant, which is reviewed by the National Heart, Lung, and Blood Institute (NHLBI). "Dissemination and Implementation (D&I) research is an integral part of the NHLBI's systematic approach to the support of research throughout the biomedical spectrum. D&I research involves extension or adaptation of generally accepted and efficacious interventions that have been previously carried out in well-controlled settings to broader populations or settings. In issuing these guidelines, NHLBI intends to provide information to assist members of the scientific community interested in applying for D&I research grants in the cardiovascular, pulmonary, blood, and sleep areas." Deadlines: 1/25/21, 5/25/20, 9/25/20. <<link>>

National Institute of Health
Research Education Program
Deadline: January 25, 2022
"The purpose of this program is to support research education activities that: (a) Complement and/or enhance the training of a workforce to meet the nation's biomedical, behavioral and clinical research needs; (b) Enhance the diversity of the biomedical, behavioral and clinical research workforce; (c) Help recruit individuals with specific specialty or disciplinary backgrounds to research careers in biomedical, behavioral and clinical sciences; or (d) Foster a better understanding of biomedical, behavioral and clinical research and its implications." <<link>>

Simons Foundation
Collaboration Grants for Mathematicians
Deadline: January 26, 2022
"The goal of the program is to support the "mathematical marketplace" by substantially increasing collaborative contacts between mathematicians. The foundation will make a large number of collaboration grants to accomplished, active researchers in the United States who do not otherwise have access to funding that allows support for travel and visitors…. Awards will be based on the quality and significance of the applicant's previous research, as outlined in the Statement of Recent Work requirement below, and on the likely impact the collaboration grant will have on future research, both for the applicant and the applicant's graduate students and/or postdoctoral fellows." <<link>>
